USER GUIDE 22

PAUPERS' RECORDS

Introduction

This User Guide details sources relating to the poor, including Poor Law, Guardians and Overseers records. See also User Guides 7 (Guilds), 9 (Medicine) and 14 (Law and Order) for related material.

Until 1597 there was no statutory poor relief, although parishes and religious houses dispensed alms and some ran 'hospitals' where paupers could gain relief. Following the Poor Law Act of 1597, parishes first appointed Overseers of the Poor, but it was the Poor Law Act of 1601 which formally constituted what became known as the 'Old Poor Law'. According to this second piece of legislation, parishes were responsible for levying a rate with which to dispense outdoor relief to their poor. Growing costs led to the Settlement Act 1662 which restricted relief to those paupers who could prove settlement in a particular parish.

The continued spiraling cost of administering the poor law eventually led to the Poor Law (Amendment) Act 1834, also known as the 'New Poor Law'. This created unions of parishes, each with a board of guardians. The unions provided both outdoor and more notably indoor relief to the poor, the latter via the workhouse system.

Unions and Guardians were abolished by the Local Government Act 1929 and their functions transferred to public assistance authorities run by county boroughs and county councils. These authorities were short-lived, however, and the poor laws were finally repealed in 1948. Note that the Old Poor Law continued to operate until this date as well as the New Poor Law; settlement cases can be found latterly in Petty Sessions records.

This user guide generally takes the reforms of 1948 as its end date, although later records are outlined in the case of some collections to indicate continuity.

Some records may have restrictions on access. In addition, it may not be possible to produce unlisted collections for consultation in the Searchroom. Please ask a member of staff for more details.
